

Ellis Hanley, friend of Cameron Gosling: A lot of years really, since primary school but we weren't so much friends until like we come into secondary school and then become better friends then.

Well we just used to go to the skate park, local. Just go ride out scooters and then like go to the BMX track and ride our bikes there.

It was quite a – well it was just like today really – the sun was out, it was cold at times but it was a nice day really.

I was further up the river in like a shallower bit at the time, and then it was as I was walking down that I realised something wasn't wrong and I just grabbed my phone and called for help.

It's been a rollercoaster really like. There's been times where like you fear like you need like those people in your life and to speak to them and, just one day you need them and they're not there and it's hard to cope with really.

They don't know the dangers, what they are getting themselves into and like they need to know that like it isn't a joke and it is serious.
