

Fred CottierLatrines

It was just a matter of a chap when he felt inclined he would go two or three yards further back in his trench, dig a little hole with his entrenching tool, do his business there and cover it up if he was lucky. But it was a risk, very risk. I've seen sometimes they've had to do it in the trench they're stood in, when things quieten down and then clean it up. That was a very bad thing that, sanitation. You just couldn't overcome the situation, there was no answer to it.